

No WNBA for Strat-O-Matic

Whenever a new pro league comes along, some gamers can hardly wait to find out if Strat-O-Matic will adopt it as quickly as those fans do.

Hal Richman already has an answer about the WNBA women's league.

"I see that they are drawing 9,000 fans per game, better than expected," Richman acknowledged. "But they're a long way off.

"I love women's tennis. I love women's track. They run for world records. There are women's times and men's times. It's a relative thing.

"But relative to men's basketball, women's basketball is not the same game. There's no dunking, no shot blocking, no scoring off the dribble. It's set shots.

"They're pretty good at set shots, but the most exciting plays in basketball are off the dribble. The rebounds are below the rim."

I love basketball, but after seeing one WNBA game, I had seen enough."
